Detroit-Born Violinist, 28, Wins Largest Prize Ever Given To String Player In U.S.

Joseph Silverstein, 28-year-old violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, won the largest prize ever offered a string player in the U.S. Its immediate cash value was $5,000, and the things that will follow have been estimated to be worth $20,000 more, says the New York Times. They include an appearance with the New York Philharmonic; a solo recital in New York; subsidized foreign and American concert tours; a recording for Columbia Records and a two-year managerial contract with Herbert Barrett Management, Inc.

Mr. Silverstein won the huge prize in public play-offs in which he pitted his skill and musicianship against two other finalists at the Grace Rainey Rogers Auditorium of the Metropolitan Museum of Art. The other finalists were David Nadien, 34, of New York; and Stanley Plummer, 33, of Los Angeles.

The contest was the first of the new-type Walter W. Naumburg Foundation competitions. In the past the Naumburg Awards used to go to two or three musicians a year, who were selected by jurors in private contests and then presented in solo recitals in Town Hall.

The new type of competition was instituted after the death of Mr. Naumburg, when it was revealed that his will provided a large sum to carry on his work of aiding young musicians. It will be a biennial event, with the next contest for a similar jackpot being offered for pianists in 1962.

The three finalists were the victors of the preliminaries and semi-finals. At the start there were four cellists and twenty-three violinists in the competition, says the New York Times. They were reduced to twelve for the semi-finals, and the possible embarrassment of a public finals with no winner selected was avoided by the jurors being warned that the finals would be cancelled if they felt no semi-finalist was worthy of so large a prize.

Leopold Mannes was the chairman of the jury and it was he who made the announcement of the winner at the end of the program. Paul Doktor, Madeline Foley, Lillian Fuchs, Robert Gerle, Joseph Knitzer, William Kroll, Hans Letz, Dorothy Minty, Aldo Parisot, Louis Persinger, Oscar Shumsky, Isaac Stern, and Efrem Zimbalist were the other judges. Leonard Bernstein, who was announced as a juror earlier, was unable to participate.

The finalists appeared as recitalists: that is, each had a piano accompanist and each played a variety of selections. The average time allotment was set at half an hour, but Mr. Nadien had a little more because he introduced Andrew Imbrie's Impromptu, a work commissioned by the foundation as part of its program to aid composers. Boris Barere was Mr. Nadien's accompanist and Charles Wadsworth was the accompanist for the other two.

Mr. Silverstein, who was the last of the three to appear, was born in Detroit, Mich., His musical teachers have included: Bernard Silverstein, Josef Gingold, Efrem Zimbalist, Veda Reynolds, and Mischa Mischakoff. He was a scholarship student of the Curtis Institute of Philadelphia and last year he placed third in the Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Competition.

Both the other finalists, who will be awarded $1,750 each, have also won prominence in other large contests. Mr. Nadien won the Edgar M. Leventritt Award in 1946 and, as a result, appeared the next year as a soloist with the New York Philharmonic, says the New

Israel To Transfer Most Of Army To Negev

Premier David Ben-Gurion said that "almost all" of the Israeli Army would move to the Negev, the barren southern half of the country. He made the statement during a visit to Elath, the southernmost Israeli town and the country's outlet to the Red Sea.

Inhabitants of the city have been complaining about the slow rate of development and the high cost of living, says the New York Times. A number of technicians pulled up stakes during the summer and the decline of the city was threatened.

The Premier assured the people that the Government had plans for development of the region. He said that Elath was one of five cities in the Negev for which $500,000,000 would be spent during the next decade for the promotion of industry.

He then remarked that the transfer of the Army to the Negev would help Elath. Officials said later that the Premier touched on a plan for transfer of training bases from the closely settled northern part of the country to the open spaces of the Negev. It was noted that the move would put the bulk of Israeli forces on the borders of Egypt.

75 U.S. Pledged Groups Open Fight On Bigotry

At a meeting in New York, at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, were samples of anti-Catholic "hate literature" distributed during the present election campaign, and a letter written by George Washington in 1790. In the letter, Washington told the Truro Synagogue, in Newport, R.I., that the Government gave "to bigotry no sanction, to persecution no assistance."

The letter is owned by Morris Morgenstern, investment banker, and president of the Morris Morgenstern Foundation, which sponsored the luncheon with the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Representatives of seventy-five national groups that are pledged to fight bigotry and bias attended the luncheon, opening a national attack on intolerance. Religious bigotry was condemned by Vice President Nixon and Senator John F. Kennedy in messages read, says the New York Times. Dr. Lewis Webster Jones, president of the Conference, declared:

"The flood of anti-Catholic hate literature currently being circulated in all parts of the country comes from the same bigoted sources which, at other times, have attacked the Negro and the Jew. Tomorrow it will be some other group."

Vice President Nixon, the Republican candidate for President, called for the eradication of "the ruinous diseases of racial and religious prejudice." He said there was more to religious liberty than the right to attend the church of one's choice. "In confronting intolerance," he declared, "we must struggle not only to hold our gains and avoid retreat, but to extend the area of enlightenment and the degree of fellowship."

Senator Kennedy, the Democratic nominee, wrote that the search for religious freedom led to the founding of the U.S., and the protection of that freedom made the United States great. "The degree that we preserve religious freedom in America," he asserted, "may well determine not only our future, but that of all mankind." His message was read by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

President Eisenhower's message said:

"In the happy tradition of religious freedom, Americans have built a sound and progressive national life. Thanks to Washington and to each citizen who carries on this tradition, we are a people who, in our several ways, seek to do justly, to love mercy, and to revere the highest qualities we know — and to honor the efforts of all of our neighbors who seek to do the same."

Gen. Carlos P. Romulo, Philippine Ambassador to the United States, spoke of the wisdom and courage of America's founders in proclaiming that all men were created equal, says the New York Times. Now, he said, Communist propaganda pictures the U.S. as material-minded, imperialist, racist, and aggressive.

Three-Faith Team To Translate Bible For Schools

A team of Roman Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish scholars has begun work on a common translation of the Bible which might end disputes over Bible reading in public schools and fill a need in inter-faith discussions and studies.

The series, to be published in thirty paperbacks by Doubleday & Co., Inc., will come out between January, 1962, and 1966, it was disclosed in New York by a leading Jesuit scholar, the Rev. Walter M. Abbott, S. J., associate editor of "America," says the New York Herald Tribune. Father Abbott said in an article, "A Bible Reader for Public Schools," published in the October 22 issue of "America" magazine, that the new trans-sectarian Bible "could turn out to be the common Bible we need for theological and ecumenical discussions."

"Modern philological studies now enable Biblical scholars of different faiths to translate verses of the Bible with such accuracy that the versions come out, as they should, saying the very same thing," he said.

The "America" article discusses a "common Bible reader" based on a common translation, which could be used by teachers in public schools without giving offense to Catholics, Protestants or Jews.

In a second section of the article, the Rev. Robert F. Drinan, S. J., dean of the Boston College Law School, takes up the legal aspects of this proposition. Father Drinan raises the question of whether the courts, agreeing with non-believers and others, would regard any kind of Bible reading as a proper function of the public schools.

Father Abbott first advocated a "Common Bible" a year ago. The idea was taken up in July by a non-Roman Catholic group, the Committee on Religion and Public Education of the National Council of Churches.

The National Council group at first appeared to favor the idea of a "common Biblical reader" for the schools, with passages based on recent accurate translations which would have approval of the various religious groups.

However, in recent weeks the National Council seems to be drawn toward an "unfortunate adaptation" of the plan, Father Abbott said, according to the New York Herald Tribune. This would be a reader containing a selection of passages from the Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Jewish Bibles to be used in relation to the proportion of Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish pupils, he noted.

Father Abbott said the common translation which is now in the planning stage will include work done by a team including William Foxwell Albright, professor emeritus of Johns Hopkins University; Bo Reicke, of the University of Basle; E. A. Speiser, of The University of Pennsylvania; and the Rev. Mitchell Dahood, S.J., of the Pontifical Biblical Institute of Rome.

N.Y.U. Scholar Finds Data In Soviet Archives Refer To Jesus; Has Sections On Film

A New York University Hebrew scholar said in Moscow that he had uncovered manuscripts that record original, uncensored sections of the Talmud — the Jewish interpretation of Biblical law.

Fragments of the manuscripts show, among other variants, that the name of Jesus appeared in the original version of the Talmud, which dates back to 500 A. D., according to Prof. Abraham I. Katsh, chairman of the Department of Hebrew Studies at N. Y. U., says the New York Times.

He brought home with him microfilm of these manuscripts and other Jewish historical data in Russian collections, all obtained from Soviet authorities. In four trips to the Soviet Union he arranged for the microfilming of major collections assembled in prerevolutionary times from all over the world.

"The work of all those involved in Jewish scholarship will be affected by the material found here," Professor Katsh said in an interview with the New York Times while still in Moscow. The Talmudic data were found among other valuable papers in the Antonin Genizah Collection of the Leningrad Public Library.

Antonin was a Russian priest who, in about 1860, went through "Genizah" — a storage place — of old Hebrew religious documents in a Cairo synagogue. Jewish custom demands that religious literature bearing the name of God cannot be destroyed, but must be buried. Antonin was able to select and take away about 1,200 fragments of manuscripts, some dating from the ninth century.

Dr. Solomon Schechter, of New York, an Anglo-American scholar, visited the Genizah in 1890 and acquired a large amount of material that had a profound affect on the history of Jewish scholarship. Professor Katsh said the Antonin Collection included fragments that were "extremely valuable" variants from the present edition of the Talmud.

The variants stem largely from deletions made by the government censors of various countries who struck out material from successive editions after the printing of the Talmudic compendium began in the sixteenth century. The variants remain to be scrutinized by Western scholars.

Dr. Katsh said that the name of Jesus, which is not found in the present Talmud, was mentioned in the original, says the New York Times. References to Jesus appear to have been struck out by civil censors either out of caprice or because they took the view that they were derogatory.

The availability of the variants on Jesus and other deviations from the accepted Talmud will help scholars understand the Talmudic law better, Dr. Katsh said. The Antonin Collection, which Dr. Katsh has on microfilm in its entirety, also contains revealing material about the life of the Jews in Egypt in the eleventh and twelfth centuries.

Dr. Katsh undertook his project in 1956 on a grant from the American Council of Learned Societies and the Rockefeller Foundation. He is the first Westerner to be given so broad an access to Soviet collections. He is receiving the microfilm in exchange for books and microfilm of Jewish data in Western hands.

Dr. Katsh, representing the American Orientalist Society and the American Council of Learned Societies, participated in an international congress of Orientalists, says the New York Times. On his seven-week tour of the Soviet Union, he found that Soviet universities in [illegible] and in the Georgian Republic had resumed the teaching of the Hebrew language, a study neglected during the Stalin era.

MONTREAL MARRIAGES

SAFRAN-TALISMAN

The marriage of Miss Joyce Talisman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Talisman, 2120 Noel Street, to Gerald Safran, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Safran, 4914 Kent Avenue, took place at Shomrim Laboker-Beth Yehudah-Shaare Tefillah Synagogue, on Sunday, October 23, at six o'clock, Dr. Chaim Denburg, Rabbi, officiating, assisted by Reverend N. Kroll and Reverend A. Machlovitch. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She was gowned in white silk taffeta and Alencon lace, re-embroidered with sequins at the neckline, waist, and panels on the skirt, which was made with a scooped neckline; long, pointed sleeves, and skirt ending in a chapel train which was drawn up to form a bustle. Her three-quarter-length veil of tulle illusion was attached to a rhinestone tiara; and she carried a white prayer book adorned with white orchids and stephanotis. Miss Arlene Talisman, sister of the bride, as maid of honour, wore a gown of silk taffeta, with an overskirt of yellow net; also a rhinestone tiara; and carried a cascade of yellow and Talisman roses. Eric Safran, brother of the groom, was best man. The ushers were: Lawrence Talisman, brother of the bride; Ronald Safran, brother of the groom; Irving Burshtyn and Seymour Epstein, cousins of the bride; Jerry Small and Edward Victor, cousins of the groom; Theodore Torchin, Herbert Greenspoon, Seymour Sthal, and Leo Edelstein. Standards of pink and white carnations and gladioli, arranged with foliage, decorated the Synagogue and hall. Mrs. Talisman, mother of the bride, was attired in a gown of peau de soie beige and bronze-coloured brocade; with matching hat. Mrs. Safran, mother of the groom, wore a beige peau de soie gown, draped at the side, with bodice covered with silver-coloured threads; also a dusty-rose-coloured hat. Their bronze-coloured orchids were pinned to their brocaded evening bags. Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Safran spent their wedding trip at the Nevele Country Club, in Ellenville, N. Y. The bride went away in a red, hand-made knit mohair suit; with a white orchid corsage; and a mink stole. They have taken up residence at 4775 Vezina Avenue. Here for the marriage were: Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Beyer, of Bronx, N. Y.; Mrs. Rose Harroll, of Philadelphia, Pa.; and Mr. and Mrs. W. Berman, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

MONTREAL MARRIAGES

GOLDENBERG-ISSENMAN

The marriage of Miss Annette Sandra Issenman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry J. Issenman, 5235 Kensington Avenue, to Edward Goldenberg, son of Isaac Goldenberg, of Ottawa, Ont., and the late Mrs. Toba Goldenberg, was solemnized in the Chapel of Shaare Zion Synagogue, on Sunday, October 23, at two o'clock, by Rabbi Maurice S. Cohen, assisted by Reverend S. Gisser. The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her princess gown of white peau de soie, was trimmed with Alencon lace and seed-pearl-beads, cut with a round neckline; short sleeves; and full skirt. Her short veil of tulle illusion was caught by a crown of seed-pearl-beads, and she carried a white prayer book adorned with pale pink orchids, baby's breath, and white satin streamers. Mrs. Isaac Korman, as matron of honour, wore a pale pink gown of sheer, embroidered organza; with matching head-band; and carried a cascade of pink and white carnations. Irving Bordoff was best man. Standards of pink and white carnations and gladioli, arranged with greenery, decorated the chapel and Synagogue hall. Mrs. Issenman, mother of the bride, was in a rose-beige-coloured, embroidered, organza gown, made with a portrait neckline; and a feathered hat of that shade. Mrs. Philip Cutler, sister of the groom, wore a gown of grey chiffon over pink peau de soie; with a pink hat. Their corsages were of pink orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Goldenberg spent their wedding trip in New York, and Miami Beach, Florida, the bride travelling in a three-piece, red, knit suit; with a red velvet hat; and a black Persian lamb jacket trimmed with mink. They have taken up residence at 4860 Bourret Avenue. Here for the marriage were: the groom's father; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Goldenberg, and William Goldenberg; Mr. and Mrs. D. Ginsburg, Mr. and Mrs. H. Baker, and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Kerzner; all of Ottawa, Ont.; and Mr. and Mrs. A. Brandt, of Beverly Hills, Cal.

"Shalom" In Rome

BY MURRAY TATE, OF TORONTO, ONTARIO

I stood on the Ponte Sisto which bridges the Tiber not far from Vatican City. It was my first visit to Rome. Many thoughts crowded my mind. The Tiber, glistening in the late afternoon sun, was much narrower than I had pictured. Yet along these waters had sailed the triremes which carried Rome's legions to Carthage and Spain, Tyre and Greece. And up this river the Maccabean Jonathan had sent Hebrew traders in 144 B.C.E. to found the first Israelite colony in Rome.

A youthful voice suddenly interrupted my thoughts.

"Hey, Meester, you buy!" It was a dark, curly-haired lad. In his hand were a few cameo brooches. I declined. "Cheap, much cheap," he persisted. I declined again. "You Shalom!" he suddenly asked. I was puzzled. Then it finally dawned on me. The Hebrew word Shalom, meaning peace, is also used as a greeting.

"Yes, me Shalom", I smiled, "Shalom Canadese."

A wide grin creased his face. He tapped his chest. "Shalom Italiano" he said proudly. We shook hands and of course I took two cameos after he told me in broken English and even more broken Yiddish that he was going to the Synagogue Ebraico and would gladly escort me there if I was interested.

We walked down the Via Lungotevere Dei Vallati till we reached an impressively beautiful edifice whose columned architecture reminded me of a Greek temple. However, the interior was strictly oriental. The walls and ceiling were completely covered with rich intricate designs. Even the iron grill behind which the women sat in the balcony was of exquisite, lace-like workmanship. It was erev Shabbos (Sabbath Eve) and the synagogue was well filled. The rich baritone voice of the cantor rose above the deep tones of an organ. The melodies and actions of the congregation were unfamiliar. There was much kissing of the hands which were then placed on the eyes and forehead. My young guide didn't miss a word or kiss.

As the service went on, the bells of St. Peter's could be heard in the distance. A young boy and girl went up to the rabbi seated at the side of the Ark in which the holy scrolls are kept. The rabbi placed his hands on their heads. "They marry Sunday," explained my young friend. Only a short distance from there is the Coliseum where the ancestors of young people like these had died in the arena. But here, dimming the bells of St. Peter's, was full-voiced singing of the ancient Hebrew prayers by a predominantly young, vigorous congregation, many of whom were in the smart uniform of the Italian army.

After the service, my guide told me that behind the synagogue lay the old ghetto which was still inhabited by Jews. He wanted to take me there but I preferred to "discover" the ghetto by myself. We parted with an a rivederci and many shalams.

It was night. The dark, narrow, winding streets with bedsheets and clothing hanging from the ancient window-sills, looked like Catfish Alleys from "Porgy and Bess." Few people were in sight. I was puzzled until I turned into a wide, cobbled street called Via Portica di Ottavia. Here was a seething mass of people eddying around portable fruit, vegetable, and drygoods stalls and bargaining with sufficient energy to drive a dozen dynamos. In one corner of the square at the end of the street, four youngsters had set up a platform and with a guitar and

DETROIT - BORN VIOLINIST, 28, WINS

York Times. Mr. Plummer was a winner in the 1951 young artists competition of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Mr. Silverstein was the only one of the three who has not given a New York recital, but he has given recitals in many cities including Detroit; Houston, Texas; Denver, Colorado; Boston, Mass., and Brussels, Antwerp, and Liège, Belgium.

The contest stipulated that each entrant had to have been an orchestral soloist and a recitalist, for its aim is "to give sustained support and encouragement to young artists of unusual promise who are already launched on their careers."

Besides being the largest award offered a string player in America, the Naumburg is probably the largest of all musical prizes ever given in the U.S. Its closest rival would be that of the Rachmaninoff Fund, a prize for pianists, which was won by Seymour Lipkin in 1948.

"SHALOM" IN ROME

accordion were giving an impromptu concert. Apparently the Italian Ebraices do not think it a sin to have fun and to shop on ersa Shabbos.

I entered a Trattoria or restaurant. The first thing that startled me was the immaculate cleanliness compared to the grimy outer walls and ancient street outside. The second surprise was the modern fixtures. A group of young men were talking, it seemed, all at the same time in rapid Italian. I ordered a cup of espresso coffee and some cake. Looking down the counter I noted that the excitement was due to a postcard which one of the fellows had received. Eventually I saw that "Montreal, Canada," was inscribed on the card which was rapidly changing hands. I tapped the chap nearest me and intimated that I was Canadian.

"Ebraica Canadese?" he asked. When I nodded my head I was immediately surrounded and the warm handshaking I experienced for the next few minutes was felt in my knuckles and elbow the next day. The family of the young counter clerk came into the store from a rear apartment. His father spoke excellent English as did most of the young men. I discovered later that many Italians had picked up the language from Allied troops.

I tried to ask questions, but for at least half an hour it was I who was interviewed. Enzo wanted to know about Montreal. It was he who had received the card from an uncle. Giacomo was interested in Toronto. He was delighted when I mentioned that the mayor of Toronto was a Jew. I also recalled that Halifax had a Jewish mayor and that we had a Jewish senator. "We too," said Giacomo, "are proud of what Jews have done in Italy. Under King Victor Emmanuel II, a Jew, Colonel Cesare Rovighi, became the King's aide-de-camp. Then Sansone D'Ancona became the first Jewish senator. Guiseppe Otolenghi was appointed minister of war; Giacomo Malvano, undersecretary of state." Enzo interjected, "And don't forget that during the first world war there were eleven Jewish generals in the Italian army."

Vittorio interrupted the flow of statistics. "Tell us more about Canada," he asked with what I felt was a touch of wistfulness. I discovered the reason for the wistfulness next day.

Eventually I asked Enzo for my bill. He shook his head and smiled. "You are our guest," he explained. I turned to the others and protested that I was a tourist and had plenty of money and after all a store was a business and life seemed hard enough in Italy. By the time I had turned back to Enzo he had fished out seven wineglasses and had filled them. "We will drink a l'chaim to our brother from Canada," he said quietly. I looked around at the warm, friendly faces and suddenly found it a little difficult to swallow the fine liqueur which undoubtedly was kept for special occasions.

"You must come tomorrow for lunch," said Enzo. I couldn't help but agree. Besides, I wanted to learn more about these proud people. I wanted to know more about the whole Jewish community.

I said my shaloms and walked out into the Via Portica di Ottavia. As I mingled with the crowds, I suddenly felt quite at home.

In Paris where swarms of flies are just slightly more numerous than poodles, I had been warned that Rome was dirty. Yet I found the opposite to be the truth. Rome seems to have more street-cleaners per block than any other European city. The only objection I had to this excellent sanitation was that the cleaner who operated each morning outside my hotel insisted on singing vigorously while at work. Not that he didn't have an excellent tenor voice. But some days I would have preferred to catch up on my sleep. The morning after my visit to the ghetto, I awoke to an aria from "La Traviata." When I realized that it was eleven o'clock, I was glad that my sweepers' voice had such excellent carrying qualities.

Enzo, Davide, Giacomo and Vittorio were waiting for me when I arrived. The meal was excellent. I was a little surprised that there was no gefulte fish or any other Jewish delicacy. While we were eating, a priest entered and chatted with Enzo's father at the counter.

"How is the feeling between Jew and Christian in Rome?" I asked.

"Very friendly," replied Enzo. He nodded toward the priest. "During the Nazi occupation many Jews were sheltered in Vatican City. Quite a few were actually harbored in monasteries and convents, and," he continued, "in some cases Jews were even afforded special facilities for our own religious observances."

"On September 26, 1943," said Giacomo, "the Nazis levied a tax of fifty kilograms of gold on the Jewish community of Rome to be paid in thirty-six hours. The Pope offered to pay most of it. His kind offer wasn't needed. We managed to raise the amount ourselves — with the help of our Christian neighbors."

"But didn't Fascism preach race-hatred even before Hitler?" I queried.

"There was no anti-Semitism in Italy until the pact with Hitler," said Enzo. "Why even a few years after Hitler came to power in Germany, our chief rabbi Sacerdoti appealed to Mussolini to help the German Jews. A central relief committee was established for German Jewish refugees. An agricultural school was set up near Siena by the Italian government and the Zionist federation to train German Jews. Other schools were founded near Genoa and Rome."

"But," interrupted Vittorio grimly, "when Hitler visited Italy in 1938 the picture began to change. Goebbels sent 'racial experts' to help the right-wing Fascists and they began to get the upper hand."

"But the Italian people never really accepted anti-Semitism," interjected Giacomo.

"I can tell you something about that," said Davide. He had been quietly listening. "When the Nazis finally took over the government toward the end of the war, they offered rewards up to fifty thousand lire if anyone would expose a Jew. The rewards were seldom claimed. There were many cases where underground fighters raided government offices and deliberately destroyed Jewish files. The Nazis finally caught me in the autumn of 1943," he reminisced. "I was loaded into a truck. There were many trucks. The S.S. officer boasted that we were going to be exterminated at Lake Maggiore. On the way a partisan band attacked the convoy. Some of us escaped. We joined the partisans," he finished quietly.

"How many Jews are there in Rome?" I asked.

"Twelve thousand," replied Giacomo. "Come on," he said, slapping my knee, "let's go out and see some of them! After all, the past is past!"

Outside, sturdy, healthy youngsters were making quite a rumpus on their way to afternoon classes. They all wore a light blue uniform. "They look healthier than our Canadian kids," I remarked.

"It's their Latin blood", laughed Giacomo.

We passed several shops loaded from floor to ceiling with bolts of excellent cloth. Other stores had vast quantities of men's and women's shoes. The contrast between the ancient cobbled streets and the bright interiors packed with merchandise was startling. I asked about this. The ghetto, I was told, had become the wholesale center of Rome. From all over the city people came to buy until the ghetto had begun to expand toward the larger streets such as the Via Aremula and the Via del Mare.

In the ghetto you can procure anything from horseshoes to motorcycles and at a lower price than anywhere else. Perhaps low overhead has something to do with it. We passed a macellsria or butcher-shop. Above the door was a neon Star of David. Inside two butchers were singing at their work. The tune wasn't Yiddish or Hebrew; it was an Italian folksong.

"Are there any Jews living outside the ghetto in Rome?" I asked.

"Of course," replied Giacomo. "There are no restrictions. But the ghetto, through tradition, is the center of Jewish life," he continued. "There are many Jewish businesses in other parts of Rome. In fact one of our largest department stores is owned by a Jew named Coen."

As we walked along a score of narrow streets there were many friendly greetings to us. Some of those who extended a hearty Buon Giorno were obviously non-Jews. The odd religious medallion or crucifix was sometime evident. I mentally contrasted the vigorous

MARRIAGES

KINER-WYNPERLE

The marriage of Miss Rosalie Elsa Wynperle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Emanuel L. Wynperle, of Amsterdam, Holland, to Stanley Kiner, son of Mr. and Mrs. Irving Kiner, 110 Lyon Avenue, was solemnized on October 15 at eight o'clock, at Beth Am Synagogue, by Rabbi Shamai Kanter. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. She wore a lace-appliqued gown of white peau de soie; fashioned with a fitted bodice, and scooped neckline; and long sheath sleeves. The full skirt had a French bow in the back which swept to a chapel train; and her finger-tip illusion veil was gathered to a tiara of pearls and rhinestones. She carried a lace-trimmed white Bible with a white orchid, and white roses mixed with stephanotis. Three sisters of the groom were the bridal attendants: Mrs. Earl Garfinkel, the matron of honour, wore apple-green; and Miss Myrna Kiner and Miss Carol Kiner, autumn-gold-colour. Their gowns were of silk organza; in sheath style, with bouffant overskirt. They had matching petal headdresses, and carried bouquets of chrysanthemums in autumn tones, trimmed with lace. Marvin Kiner, brother of the groom, was best man. The ushers were: I. Ceresne, B. Davidson, M. Simon, E. Garfinkel; and G. Gate, of Detroit, Mich. A dinner and reception followed at the Synagogue. Mrs. Wynperle, mother of the bride, wore a bronze-toned lace sheath; with a scooped neckline; and matching jacket; and had a corsage of deep red roses. Mrs. Kiner, mother of the groom, wore a champagne-coloured peau de soie gown; fashioned with a fitted, brocaded bodice, and scooped neckline; with a bell-shaped skirt; and she had a corsage of pink roses. Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Kiner spent their wedding trip motoring to Miami Beach, Fla. They will reside at 4340 Bathurst Street. Here for the occasion were: Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Gate, and Mr. and Mrs. Abe Kernerman, of Detroit, Mich.; Mr. and Mrs. Philip Bubus, of Washington, D.C.; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Kiner, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Belfor, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Belfor, and Mr. and Mrs. Morris Kiner, of Rochester, N.Y.; Miss Dorothy Kiner and Mr. and Mrs. David Zeltzer, of Philadelphia, Pa.

Jewish colony of Rome and its friendly interfaith relationship, with the grim picture of present-day German Jewry so vividly outlined recently by Rabbi Joachim Prinz, of Newark, N. J. The Rabbi had recently said after a visit, that Berlin's 1933 Jewish population of 175,000 had dwindled to four thousand in a city of three millions. Not a single synagogue remained in Berlin while Rome has three in 1956. German Jewry which once totalled 550,000, now is reduced to 22,000 with no hope whatever in the future for these few.

"What future have Italian Jews?" I suddenly asked.

"The same as for the rest of the Italian people," replied Enzo. "Italy is overcrowded," he continued, "there is a lot of unemployment. Some of us are doing well. For others it is very difficult. But we don't sit and cry. We do our best. Our community helps itself and we get some assistance from America."

"What are your personal plans, Enzo?" I queried.

"Well," he replied, "the restaurant will keep my mother, father, and sister. But me? I'm going to Canada to join my uncle!"

"What about you, Giacomo?" I asked.

"My father has a clothing factory here in Rome. He says I'll never learn the business. But I'm going to stay here and prove he's wrong!"

"And you, Davide?" I probed.

Davide took a while before replying. Then he smiled in his slow manner.

"Next year," he said, "I'm going to Israel. Italy's a fine country and the people are good. But what strength and years I still possess I want to put into Eretz Israel. It has the greatest past in history, some day it will have the greatest future."

"What about you, Vittorio?" I questioned.

Vittorio has broad shoulders. But they seemed to sag a little. We had by this time walked through the entire ghetto and found ourselves in front of the Synagogue Ebraico.

"What about me?" repeated Vittorio. "I would have liked to have gone to Canada," he replied. "My wife and three children already have visas to go there, but I couldn't get one and they refuse to go without me."

"Why were you refused?" I demanded.

He shrugged his shoulders. "I was one of the Italian Jews taken by the Nazis for slave labor in Germany. Sometimes I didn't work hard enough to suit them. So they beat me till my kidneys were ruined. You have to have good kidneys to get into Canada," he said wryly. "It's hard for me to make a living here," he continued, "I do odd jobs. Sometimes I act as guide around the ghetto for tourists. I know every stone in the place. There are other Jews like myself. We manage — after a fashion." He suddenly straightened his shoulders. "But there's one place," he said with a smile, "where even a Jew without kidneys is welcome and where his children have a future. And we are going there — to Israel!"

I shook hands with my four brothers at the gate of the Synagoga, just as the retreating sun's rays tinted the exquisite roof. And as I said Shalom it seemed that the ancient greeting had gained a much deeper, richer meaning.

The Zionist Movement In Search Of A New Deal

BY DR. MAX NUSSBAUM, OF HOLLYWOOD, CAL., CHAIRMAN OF THE NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COUNCIL OF THE ZIONIST ORGANIZATION OF AMERICA; PRESIDENT OF THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATION OF LIBERAL RABBIS; VICE PRESIDENT OF THE LOS ANGELES COLLEGE OF JEWISH STUDIES

The Zionist Movement has recently been under attack from two opposite quarters: The assimilationist forces in the United States, on the one hand, and members of the Israeli Government, particularly the Prime Minister and Foreign Minister, on the other. The attacks on the Zionist Movement by the Prime Minister of Israel must receive serious consideration.

At the Mapai Central Committee meeting early in June, Mr. Ben-Gurion said that Jews all over the world agreed that other Jews may find a haven in Israel and that in this respect, "There is no difference between Zionists and non-Zionists." He then went on to ask, "Will the Zionist Movement in America organize Aliyah mass immigration which is Israel's most pressing need, or Hebrew education, which is what Jewry elsewhere needs most?" And apparently concluding that the Zionist Movement will do neither, he climaxed his remarks by saying that the Zionist Movement "creates a gulf between the younger generation of Israel and the Jewish people, for how can we explain to the young generation that there are two sorts of Jews, Zionists and others?" Thus Mr. Ben-Gurion's latest utterance on the future of Zionism.

There is a basic fallacy in Mr. Ben-Gurion's logic: In spite of appeals and much oratory, of public declarations and even denunciations, there will be no mass immigration to Israel from the American Jewish community.

American Jews, and that goes for Zionists also, look upon themselves as living in Chuts La'Aretz, (a historic term used in the Talmudic Age to denote free and creative communities outside Palestine) and do not feel that their existence in the United States is characterized by Exile. The American Jewish community feels solidly at home in these United States, and considers its members first-class citizens functioning normally in the fabric of America. The sooner this realistic view is accepted by some Israeli leaders, the better for Israel and the better for us.

To make Aliyah the only criterion of a Zionist in the United States is, therefore, not only unrealistic, but simply naive. In spite of this, however, the Zionist Movement in the free world is a historic necessity not only for the lands of the Diaspora, but specifically for Israel itself. For what the Prime Minister does not understand, apparently, is the fact that every great cause in history needs a dedicated army in order to translate its vision into reality.

It is true that, with minor exceptions, the whole of American Jewry is sympathetic and friendly toward Israel, but there is a vast difference between sympathy and commitment, and American Jewry, with all its friendship, is not committed to Israel, while the Zionist Movement is an organization of commitment. There is a great difference between organizations which were founded for an entirely different purpose and which have now added an Israeli project to the many projects they had undertaken before, and a movement which is wholly, devotedly, and zealously committed to the conception of Jewish peoplehood and the centrality of the State of Israel.

This psychological difference has emerged clearly again and again and especially during the critical period of the Sinai campaign when many of the so-called friends manifested a negative attitude towards Israel's move, whereas Zionists, and Zionists alone, stood firm and proved to be Israel's only reliable allies. The young Jewish State will, therefore, be in need of a strong and influential Zionist Movement for decades to come, because Israel is a great historic cause and needs not only friends, but allies; not only sympathy, but commitment. The Zionist Movement is the only organization in the free world that can fulfill this requirement.

When political thinking will reach the state of greater maturity, even some Israeli leaders will come to the conclusion that the Zionist Movement is not a gulf, but a veritable bridge between the Jewish State and the Jewish people.

Having stated this position, one must, in all fairness, look at the problem from an Israeli viewpoint. The Zionist Movement only warrants its existence if it can, first, continue to serve the State of Israel in the areas of its needs; and, secondly, unify the dispersed Jewish communities under the concept of peoplehood through a program of intensified Jewish education and deepened cultural Hebraization.

Seen from this angle, Aliyah, not in its old European connotation of mass immigration, but in American terms of selectivity, will have to be given our most serious consideration. In American terms, Aliyah would connote middle-class settlement, for which a growing interest can be observed, as well as the sending of experts in various fields of Israel's economy and technology. This is in addition to the exchange program of students at Israeli High Schools or at the Hebrew University, projects which we have already successfully undertaken and which will have to be greatly enlarged.

The time has come for the Zionist Movement to manifest the courage of its own convictions and project this type of American Aliyah, directing itself to the three categories of the middle class, the expert, and the student. And though even such a program will never lead to mass immigration, it is a constructive undertaking and will serve the basic needs of the State. It may, also, be stated categorically that no other organization, here or abroad, will compete with us in this field of endeavor.

This, then, would be a unique contribution of the Zionist Movement and be a real challenge to Jewish communities, not only in the United States, but in the whole of the free world. The same holds true for spreading the Hebrew language on the youth and adult level via the mass media of radio and television, as well as via schools and adult education projects.

Again, it is an undertaking which we have hardly begun, which is a difficult task, and no other organization will rush into battle with us for the honor of committing itself unreservedly to the Hebraization of our Jewish communities.

It is within this frame of reference that one has to discuss the important role of the Zionist Organization of America in the United States. For without a strengthened and revitalized Z.O.A., there will never be a strong and vital Zionist Movement in America.

The critical situation in which the Zionist Organization finds itself is, in my opinion, the effect of four causes: Loss of prestige, lack of program, reduction in membership, and precariousness in finances, and in this order. Because I am convinced that an organization that has prestige and program will almost automatically also enjoy a large membership and enough income to cover its operations. We have, therefore, to undertake several important steps in order to confront the organization with the realities of the post-State era.

One cannot go about our Zionist business in the normal routine of functions as if it were a period prior to 1948. The situation has changed radically, and it is about time that, with courage, vision, and imagination, we live up to the historic challenge of our generation. What we desperately need in the Z.O.A. today is a "New Deal" for the Zionist Organization.

In order to regain prestige, the first step to be taken is the reunification of the Zionist forces in the United States. We have lost too many important names in American Jewish leadership. Some of them broke away from us and joined the "American Jewish League for Israel." Others became active in the United Jewish Appeal, and Bonds, but severed all relations with the Zionist Organization. The time has come to reopen serious negotiations with these groups and individuals in order to enable them to return to the fold of the Z.O.A.

The disagreements between us have become meaningless, and there is no problem between us that cannot be solved in a spirit of amity. We have done very little practical work as a result of the so-called "Identification Resolution", and the other so-called "Independent" side has not entirely closed its lines of communication with certain corresponding groups in Israel and the Diaspora.

I am, therefore, firmly convinced that a formula can be evolved which would satisfy us as well as the members of the "League". Once this is done, the recreation of a single Confederation of General Zionists would logically follow in its wake. Such a move would not only strengthen the leadership of the Z.O.A. but would enhance the prestige of our organization by the tremendous impact which such a reunion and such a consolidation would have upon the American Jewish community.

This reunified Zionist Organization of America would, then, as the second step, embark upon a program which serves the needs of Israel, on the one hand, and corresponds to the needs of the American Jewish community, on the other. For no organization can prosper unless its programs correspond to the need of the community. This is doubly true of a Zionist organization.

Among our important projects in Israel, for instance, the Z.O.A. House has been the most popular and most successful, because the idea of an American House in Israel corresponds to the psychological need of the Israeli as well as the American Jew who visits the State. The role that the Z.O.A. House in Tel Aviv has been playing in recent years makes us rightly proud of the vision of our organization, and demands of us at this hour to proclaim to American Jewry that we are determined to continue this project with the establishment of an American House in Jerusalem and one in Haifa as a ten or even twenty-year project of the new reunified Z.O.A.

The same is true of middle class Aliyah which, because our members come from this social stratum, we could manage more effectively than any other organization within the Zionist Movement. The same goes for private investments in Israel, possibly along the line of investment groups which some of our leaders started in different parts of the country, by which, again, because of the nature of our organization and the over-abundance of businessmen in our ranks, the Z.O.A. could not only became the spearhead for an enriched movement for private investment in Israel, but would simultaneously make a contribution to the State which would satisfy even a government headed by a critical Prime Minister.

Correspondingly, in America the Hebraization of the Jewish community is the most important task of the Zionist Movement in the Diaspora. We ought, therefore, to come to the American Jewish community with a long range program for the establishment of a chair for Hebrew in every single state university in these United States. In addition to the fact that such an undertaking would be the greatest contribution that we could make both from an Israeli and a Zionist viewpoint, the psychological ramifications are immediately in evidence:

Each Region would undertake the establishment of the chair at their own State University and alma mater, thus involving all their districts, the Jewish and general community, city and county, state officials, legislators, and Congressmen. In short, we would achieve an involvement of thousands of members throughout the country, working for a Zionist goal, yet at the same time for an American task, enhancing the status of Zionism in their area, and simultaneously making a contribution to the spiritual realm of America.

This is a good example, and there are many others, of creating a program which corresponds to the psychological need of our members in expressing themselves as Jews, Zionists, and Americans at one and the same time. If, in addition to this type of programming, the Z.O.A. will take advantage of the new structure of the American Zionist Council and undertake the implementation of the many new projects which will from now on belong to its jurisdiction, it can develop endeavors in the field of public relation and Zionist education to keep our members busy day by day.

A reunified Zionist Organization of America, which has regained prestige and has developed a challenging program, will then, thirdly, be in a good position to strengthen its relationship not only with the American Zionist Council and the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, but also with the Hadassah, the strongest General Zionist Organization in the United States. Together with Hadassah, and through the help they might be willing to extend to us via the enrollment of husbands in a reunified and revitalized Z.O.A., we could create a General Zionist Movement in the United States second to none, both in prestige, membership, and influence.

It is not easy to get Jews who have never been affiliated with the Zionist Movement to join Zionist organizations at this particular time. But where one member of the family has already been active in Zionist affairs, it is not too difficult to influence the partner in marriage to join the corresponding men's organization which manifests the very same Zionist ideology. The increase in membership alone could amount to thousands of newcomers into our ranks, and we could then achieve in the United States the realization of the concept of "Zionist Families," by which a man and his wife belong to the men's and women's organization, respectively, of the very same coloration.

Such a Z.O.A., with prestige, program, and large membership, will, in my opinion, have no difficulties in assuring the flow of contributions from our members, as well as from the general Jewish community in the United States. I am certain that by presenting the Zionist Organization of America to the Jewish community in this new format, one can tap new resources that have never been opened to us hitherto.

The large number of new members would in themselves constitute a new source of revenue, and the good impression which this "New Deal" in Zionist affairs would make upon the community at large would open the heart of many a Jew in America to lend a helping hand in the execution of our program.

Like America as a whole and the Zionist Movement on the international scene, the Z.O.A. is in search of a new image. I pray that we may be privileged to rise to the challenge of the hour by giving great answers to the great questions Destiny has placed upon us.
